g. Note: you might want to check on the author of your work (esp. the longer works) by looking up his biography (Wikipedia might have something), especially using Oxford Dictionary of National Biography (ODNB), http://www.oxforddnb.com/index.jsp (might have to go through Booth Library page if off-campus)

3. Find three illustrations from the 17th century and analyze what they show about English/European knowledge of your region. (While the illustrations can be from EEBO, you can use the following

i. Click on “Database,” then subject (China leads to 8 images and 4 Asians; Africa 4 images and 11 Blacks; Ottoman/Levant 4 images although only of the Holy Land)

b. ArtStor [http://www.artstor.org/][if off-campus must go through Booth Library and login]
i. Click Go and Enter ArtStor Digital Library, click Advanced Search
   (1) China in any field, and Europe for Geography, and 1600-1700 yields 5 items (for example a Ming Dynasty Ewer but found in London)

c. Be sure to do two things with your image
   i. Describe it. A paragraph from a rich engraving is not too much and tells us what you think is most important for your argument in the engraving/painting.
   ii. Cite it. I need source and date (author/artist if possible). Sometimes this information helps your argument. “In 1655, the Dutch were interested in porcelain as shown by Vermeer’s painting of X in that year.”
   iii. You might also include the image itself in your paper if you think it helps.

4. Compare and contrast your images/assessment with what Brook discovers focusing on one of his chapters.
   I’d start my paper with this, if I was writing the paper. In other words, in X, Brook examines Y in the 17th century. Y is a good image/metaphor/gateway into the relation between England or the Netherlands and the region of Z. This paper seeks to compare that image with other data/information about the relation between Europe and Z in the 17th century.
   a. “View from Delft” This focuses on the VOC and Holland–Asia trade. If there is a company going from your region to Europe (East India, African, Levant) you might compare it with this chapter and image (of the warehouse).
   b. “A Dish of Fruit” focuses on Chinese Porcelain in a painting and the China China trade (as it were). Obviously, this would be good for a focus on China, but if you have info. and images of Persian rugs or other artisan goods from your region, you could also compare them.
   c. “Geography Lessons” Another “Turkish” rug, but also, of course, maps. Why maps of your region in English? What is shown on the maps (churches?, towns?, ports?, rivers?)? Why?
   d. “Journeys” Paintings of people in strange locations. In this painting (not by Vermeer) it is a young African Black servant in a domestic Dutch scene. Obviously this would be a good focus for a focus on relations with Sub-Saharan Africa. But the chapter also discusses Chinese in Africa, etc. Do you have images of turbaned Englishmen in the Ottoman or Persian worlds? Who, when, what does this say about the period/relation
