

WELCOME TO MY SITE!

If you are a teacher/student of languages (of French in particular, but also of other languages, including ESL), you will find in this section information that I hope will be useful to you and/or your students.

If you visit my "student information" page (links available at top and bottom of every page of my site), you will find an informative, and hopefully convincing, article on the benefits of studying French, as well as links to a "Study Tips" page which has some information that may be of benefit to you and your students..

You are welcome to use this information for your own classes.

If you do use this information and find it helpful, I would appreciate an e-mail letting me know (my department chair and other university officials would be happy to know that my web site serves as a resource not just for my students, but as a means of outreach to help other French teachers and students).

Also, please be aware that most of this information is my work, with exceptions noted at the bottom of individual documents as applicable. When using any of these materials other than reading them off my web site (for example, if you print out something to hand out to students), please indicate the source (Dr. Kathryn M. Bulver, Eastern Illinois University, Charleston, IL). Thank you in advance.

Teachers: If you have requests/suggestions for other materials that would be of use to you and your students, or any comments on my site, please contact me.

French teachers: Check out my "Pour les profs" section, which contains activities you can use with your students (all levels) and other information you may find of particular use.

(Note: the "Pour les profs" section is currently still a work in progress, which means there's not much there except a notice of what is going to be there! I did, however, avoid the annoying "under construction" animation that one sometimes finds with web pages that aren't yet finished. The good news is that I'm open to consider all suggestions and requests for what YOU would find useful. Please feel free to email me).
